SUBDIVISION CODE, MIKE HANSON

Mike Hanson of the Hanson Group went through the changes made to the subdivision code. 18 19 Councilmember Paxton asked if there was another place where easements for trails connectivity was located besides cul-de-sacs. It needs to be in all areas, including open space, not just cul-de-20 sacs. Mike Hanson stated he will add the language for all areas to include easements for 21 trails/connectivity. Mike Hanson stated Utah Code 10-15A-5 is the core thing the state is going to 22 look for and which is who is the land use authority. If this code was adopted as is, an application 23 would first go to the Planning Commission for preliminary approval. For final approval the 24 25 subdivision goes to the Subdivision Revue Committee which would consist of 2 council members, 2 planning commission members, the city engineer and city manager and has to have a 26 unanimous vote. It used to be the default answer to approving a subdivision was no until 27 approved. The new law now makes the default answer yes until the city says no. The checklist 28 helps the city say no if all the requirements are not meant. This committee is the last step and 29 approves the final application. Discussion ensued on how many members and who should be on 30 the committee. Cities can no longer mandate a pre application or concept plan but if the applicant 31 requests it the city has to accommodate them. The city clerk first looks at the application and does 32 not accept any applications unless it has checked all the boxes for completeness. The planning 33 commission checks for correctness. Then goes back to the developer for corrections. It can go 34 back and forth 4 times. At this point if the developer has not meant all the 35 requirements/corrections the city can say no. Then it has to start all over again with a new 36 application and fees. If the city approves the preliminary, then the developer can apply for final 37 approval which goes to the Subdivision Revue Committee who either approves it or denies it. 38 Discussion ensued on what a minor subdivision is, which was decided to be 1-3 lots. 39 Councilmember Peterson suggested changing the word expert to something more defined. Mike 40 Hanson stated the time clock does not start until all the boxes are checked on the checklist. The 41 42 critical environmental areas are exempt from the new code. Mike Hanson will double check the 43 language on sensitive areas. Discussion ensued on developments that are too big and the option to throw all this out and do a contract with the developer. Mike Hanson will make all the changes 44 and have the draft ready for the Planning Commission for the November meeting. 45
